

I am Naseem Ahmed, born on 01 March, in a small village, Talka Kingri, District Khairpur, Sindh, Pakistan. I am from a middle class educated family with rural background. My father was government officer; he knew the importance of education in human life, so, he sent all his children to school. School was not in our village, we all brothers and sisters have got our primary education in near by village. I have passed Matriculation from Government High School Ahmed Pur, where Sindhi was the medium of education. I have completed my graduation from Shah Abdul Latif University, Khairpur, I went to Quaid-i-Azam University, Islamabad, for my higher education. Where I completed my Ph. D in 2008, and post doctorate from University of London in 2012, my education was not possible without the moral and financial support of my family. Since, January, 2009, I am working as Senior Research Fellow, at National Institute of Historical and Cultural Research, Center of Excellence, Quaid-i-Azam University, Islamabad.

My field my specialization is Pakistan Foreign Policy, Taliban, Terrorism and Madrassah. I regularly contribute in national and international research journals, magazines and newspapers.
