

Dr. Husam Arman is currently an Associate Research Specialist at Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research (KISR). He is currently engaged in work related to improving Kuwait national competitiveness and in particular the national innovation system and SMEs development. His previous research was in technology, innovation, and R&D management. During his Research Fellow post while at The University of Nottingham, he worked with international firms such as Rolls-Royce to develop methodologies to optimize technology and innovation strategies. His university's experience in the UK and Palestine included empirical studies with public organizations and firms with the purpose of improving industries, in addition to intuitional development activities. His work has appeared in R&D Management Journal, International Journal of Industrial and Systems Engineering, International Journal of Technology Intelligence, International Journal of Innovation and Technology Management, Technology Innovation Management Review, and Clean Technologies and Environmental Policy.