

Dr Nashwa Elyamany is an assistant professor of linguistics at the College of Language and Communication (CLC), Arab Academy for Science, Technology and Maritime Transport (AASTMT), Egypt. She obtained her Master's degree in TEFL from the American University in Cairo (AUC) and her PhD in linguistics from the Faculty of Arts, Alexandria University, Egypt. She currently holds the Head of Languages Department position with a twenty-year experience in EFL/ESP instruction, assessment and program coordination. She is also a certified IELTS speaking examiner with a proven track record of academic achievements, professional development, and intercultural communication. She has published in national and international science journals and participated in several national and international conferences, too. She is an affiliated member of Association of Professors of English and Translation at Arab Universities (APETAU), based in Jordan.

Dr. Elyamany is interested in several areas of linguistics and applied linguistics - namely pragmatics, stylistics, cognitive linguistics, multimodal discourse analysis, language assessment, teacher training, Computer-Assisted Language Learning (CALL), Mobile Learning and English for Specific Purposes (ESP) - as well as interdisciplinary research projects in light of solid academic background and extensive coursework in areas of specialization. She is currently leading and taking part in two institutional two-year-long research projects: "Digital Literacy Initiatives (DLI) in Language and Literature Postgraduate Programs" and "Intercultural Rhetoric Study of Egyptian and American Business Students' Persuasive Writing". She is also actively engaged in collaborative scholarly work with researchers in Spain making steady steps to create an interdisciplinary research line geared toward the implementation of innovative analytical tools based on modern language and communication theories in their analysis of a diversity of media outlets.
