

Gregory Katsas

Dr. Katsas received a Bachelor's degree in Behavioral Sciences from Drew University and a Master's and Ph.D. degree in Sociology from Fordham University. He has extensive teaching experience in a wide range of Sociology courses (Introduction to Sociology, Social Inequality, Demography, Urban Sociology, Sociology of Tourism, Environmental Sociology, Quantitative Methodology). His current position is Associate Professor at DEREЕ-The American College of Greece, but has also taught at Fordham University and the Hellenic School of Military Medicine. He is participating in conferences in Greece and abroad, has published numerous articles, and organizes an annual international Sociology conference in Athens. His latest publications include a study on immigrant unemployment in Greece, an edited volume on migration and work and an edited book on food. In addition, he is actively involved in the scholarship of teaching and learning, has offered seminars and has published articles on teaching Sociology. Currently he is the Director of Student Academic Support Services, which provides academic skill development for DEREЕ students. In his leisure time he enjoys photography.

Contact email: grkatsas@acg.edu