

For the past thirty years Dr. Luciak has conducted field research in Mexico, Central America, Cuba and Colombia focusing on revolutionary change, gender equality, and democratization. He holds a J.D. from Universität Wien, Austria and a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa, United States. He has been a visiting professor/fellow at the Universidad Centroamericana in Nicaragua, Stockholm University, Sweden, Universität Innsbruck, Austria, and at The Society for the Humanities, Cornell University. For the past 15 years he has served as Professor of Political Science at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. Professor Luciak has written for Swedish, Austrian, British, Mexican, Nicaraguan, Salvadoran and North American publications. He has worked as a consultant for the United Nations Development Program (UNDP), the United Nations Women's Fund (UNIFEM), the Office of the Special Advisor to the Secretary General on Gender Issues and the Advancement of Women (OSAGI) and the Swedish International Development Authority (Sida). He has given numerous invited lectures and organized several international conferences on Central America. He has served as an invited election observer in El Salvador and Nicaragua and has been an official delegate and invited expert to several United Nations conferences. Recent publications include a multi-year study on "Gender Equality and Democratization in Central America and Cuba" for the European Commission. Based on this study he published After the Revolution: Gender and Democracy in El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala (Johns Hopkins University Press, 2001), which uses a gender lens to examine the transformation of the revolutionary Left from armed guerrilla movements into political parties. The second part of this research project was published by the University Press of Florida (2007, Paperback 2009) and is entitled Gender and Democracy in Cuba. He is currently completing a book manuscript entitled, The Electrolux King: Reality and Myth in the Life of Axel Wenner-Gren. His latest article based on this research project has been published in October 2016 as part of a special commemorative issue of Current Anthropology. The commissioned article focuses on the complex relationship between the benefactor, Axel Wenner-Gren and Paul Fejos, the first scientific director of the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research.
