

I have been a nurse educator for the twenty three years. I am currently a nurse educator at Brunel University. I teach nursing research and pharmacology related to nurse prescribing. I have degrees in life sciences, a masters in experimental pathology and biochemical pharmacology. I also have a Doctorate in Education. Since 2008, I have been researching lived experience of women with breast cancer. I undertake my research at Shaukat Khanum Cancer Memorial Hospital and research Centre, Lahore, Pakistan. I have an interest in the social support needs of breast cancer patients. I have published research in this area. I have around 70 publications in relation to nursing education, microbiology and health. I am currently planning a research study with Egyptian and Chinese partners.
