

Francesco Pastore [Ph.D. (Sussex); Dottorato ("Federico II"); M.Sc. (Coripe-Piemonte); Laurea ("Federico II")] qualified as full professor of Economic Policy and as Associate Professor of Economics and Economic Statistics in 2013. Currently, he is Associate Professor of Economics at Seconda Università di Napoli; research fellow of the IZA of Bonn; Secretary of the Italian Association of Labor Economists; and member of the executive board of the Italian Association of Comparative Economic Studies.

He is a member of the editorial board of a number of journals, such as, among others, Sage open, Scuola democratica – Learning for Democracy, Review of Middle East Economics and Finance, Romanian Journal of Economic Forecasting. His research activity has embraced such issues as the school-to-work transition, regional unemployment and industrial restructuring, economic inequality, gender discrimination, the determinants of trade and capital flow, the transition from plan to market, the analysis of non-profit organizations.

He has acted as a consultant for, among others, the EU Commission, ILO, UNDP and World Bank.

In addition a Springer Briefs monograph on: “The Youth Experience Gap. Explaining National Differences in the school-to-work Transition”. He has also published two edited books for Springer Verlag, three special issues of the International Journal of Manpower and a number of scientific articles in such journals as, among others: Journal of Economic Surveys, Stata Journal, Economics of Education Review, European Journal of Development Research, Economics of Transition, Comparative Economic Studies.

He regularly contributes columns to such online popular magazines as Social Europe, Lavoce.info, Linkiesta, NelMerito, Learning4. His evidence based, policy oriented and thought-provoking columns are the object of much debate not only in the academic world, but also in all social networks.