

"Laia Comerma is a PhD candidate at the Pompeu Fabra University and a predoctoral research fellow at the Barcelona Institute for International Studies, having done a research stay at the Lau China Institute of the King's College of London. Her PhD dissertation "The influence of the EU-China economic relationship on the reconfiguration of the economic regime global governance" digs deeper on the perspective of norms, rules and institutions that structure the foreign policy relation of economic cooperation between China and the European Union, and how they are being reformed due to their interaction in the fields of investment, trade and finance. Her research fields of interest are foreign policy analysis, Chinese foreign policy, EU foreign policy, and EU-China cooperation.

She holds a Bachelor (BA) in Philosophy, Politics and Economics from Pompeu Fabra University, a Master of Science (MSc) in International Relations from the London School of Economics and Political Science, and a Postgraduate Degree in International Commerce and Economy from the University of Barcelona."