

Giuseppe Luca De Luca Picione (PhD) teaches “Sociology of the social, economic and political institutions” at the University of Naples “Federico II”. His research studies go from social politics to the hybridizations between science and society, and to the institutional and scientific consolidation of the lifelong learning discipline area. He is the author of “The right to money or money for rights? From the contrast to the poverty to a welfare of opportunities” (with M.C. Agodi, 2009); “Lifelong learning politics in the institutions of Campania. The social actors and the system actions” (2010); “The citizenship income in Campania. Elements of analysis for evaluating the measure implementation in Campania” (2010); “The learnfare demand in local contexts. Actors and users of the adult education in the territorial precincts in Campania” (2014). Among his publications you can find articles for scientific magazines, contributions in books and studies for the National Committee of enquiry for the social exclusion and for other research organizations.
