

Henry Lee Allen is Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Wheaton College. Dr. Allen was appointed to this academic position in August 1998. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree (with honor) in Biblical Studies from Wheaton College in 1977. Professor Allen subsequently acquired masters and Ph.D. degrees in the social sciences from the University of Chicago. Dr. Allen's major research interests include the sociology of science (scientific literacy), the academic professions, and mathematical sociology. In July 2016, Hank presented his criminological research at the International Sociological Association's Global Forum held in Vienna, Austria July 10-14. His topic was: Social Justice, Police Shootings, and Abusive Social Encounters with African Americans—exploring Supreme Court rulings, police policies on the use of deadly force, United Nations' reports on the status of African Americans, reports on human rights by the Chinese, and a plethora of research in criminology and sociology. Just recently, the European Public Law Organization has requested this presentation as a chapter in a forthcoming book about global issues. Throughout his career, Hank has published numerous research articles for the National Education Association about sociology, ethnicity, and American higher education. Moreover, he has recently published national articles on science and the future of higher education in the United Kingdom, Canada, Israel, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Finland. In July 2014, he presented his research on global transformations in science and higher education to the World Congress of Sociology in Yokohama, Japan. Before coming to Wheaton College, Dr. Allen held faculty positions at Bethel College (MN), Calvin College (MI), the Margaret S. Warner Graduate School of Education and Human Development at the University of Rochester, and the Behavioral Sciences Division at the Rochester Institute of Technology.
