

Kristina Jovanova holds a PhD degree in Global and Local Sustainable Development from the State University St. "Cyril and Methodius", Skopje. She is an experienced professional with a demonstrated working record of 18 years in the international affairs industry. Skilled in Local Government and Decentralization, Public Administration, Democratization and Democratic Governance, Sustainable Development and Globalization, Dr. Jovanova manages strong policy, programme and project portfolio in the Human Dimension Department / Democratic Governance and Social Cohesion Unit within the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE Mission to Skopje).

Dr. Jovanova is specialized in teaching, training and capacity building of public administration officers, young politicians, local government elected officials and NGOs on democratic governance values and principles. She has organized and took lead in numerous international conferences, study visits to European and Asian countries, developed policy recommendations for institutional change management and total quality management in public sector institutions, produced sustainable development strategies to local self-government units, promoted inter-governmental cooperation and acted as professional in elections related activities in her home country and with neighbouring countries in the region.

Her academic research interest is focused on exploring sustainable development modalities for the increasingly growing global-local connections, upgrading the current global economic system and potentials of technological development for building egalitarian societies. The academic experience of Dr. Jovanova covers numerous publications and papers published by the European Centre for Sustainable Development and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.