

Dr Neslihan Kahyalar is a Lecturer at De Montfort University. She holds degrees from Eastern Mediterranean University (BSc Economics), the University of Leicester (MSc Political Research) and Swansea University (PhD Economics).

Her research interests include development economics, microeconomics and labour economics with research concentrating on the underground economies - informality and financial crises. She is also keen to work on other development related topics such as health-related issues in the contexts of developing countries, human capital development and aspects of the implications of climate change. She has taught courses on these and other subjects at different levels. She currently teaches courses in Macroeconomics, Financial Markets and Central Markets and European Economic Issues.