

SHORT BIO

András Márton is assistant professor at the Department of Sustainability Management and Environmental Economics as part of the Institute of Sustainable Development, Corvinus University of Budapest, Hungary. His main fields of research are sustainable development, renewable energies, future orientation of decision makers, electromobility, strategic foresight, financial forecasting, strategic planning and management. He has experience in national and international projects (e.g., Ecological Horizon Scanning: Hungary 2050, RE-ACT – Self-reflection tools for smart universities acting regionally, post-Covid sustainable pathways for the V4 countries).